Guest Article :

Rev. Jerome Machar OCSO

"[Abraham] is our father in the sight of God, in whom he believed, who gives life to the dead and calls into being what does not exist" (Rom 7:14). We walk by faith and not by sheer grit or determination. Faith is a gift, freely given and meant to be freely received. It cannot be earned, but it must be cooperated with. We may be unfaithful, but God is ever faithful and that is the reason for our hope. We may falter, but he bends down to us and lifts us up again. We must never forget that the gift of salvation is just that, a gift.

As the People of God, we are called to walk by faith, to lift up our eyes to the Holy Mountain where the Most High dwells and seek His guidance. It is not what we can do by ourselves that matters. What matters is what God does through us. God can produce a bountiful harvest through our fruitless and barren efforts. God honors faith and faithful people honor God. If we want God to do something through us, we must not be embarrassed to give Him our nothing. Like Abraham, we must be willing to hope against hope that God who is faithful to his word can do all that he promised. The key is to trust that God who raised his Son from the dead can do marvels in us. As people of faith, we cannot be indifferent onlookers in our troubled world. We are called to be instruments of peace and love who reconcile the fragmented society and bring people together in communion.

As the universal church begins the synodal process, we are encouraged to continue our journey of faith, being willing to encounter faces, meet eyes, and share one another's history. If we intend to enter into dialogue, we must be willing to be challenged. As we progress on this journey, we must be willing to be changed. Because each of us encounters the Word of God uniquely and personally, we must be open to the voice of the Spirit echoing in each human heart. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we will be able to discern our times in solidarity with the struggles and aspirations of all of humanity. The God of Abraham is calling us to embrace our fruitless and sterile lives and then to surrender all that we are to the movement of the Spirit. In the process, we will be able to embrace one another as brothers and sisters in the Lord. Like Abraham, we must be willing to walk away from our comfort zones and follow the lead of the Spirit each day of our lives.

Like our father in faith, we will discover that everything changes once we are encountered by God who made us. Our shriveled hearts will be expanded making us capable of loving all that God loves. Our weak limbs will carry us along the path of life. No longer timid or afraid, because we are guided by the inspired Word and willing to the surprised by the workings of the Holy Spirit. Knowing ourselves to be called by God who first sought us, we will rejoice with an inexpressible joy that has been touched by the glory shining on the face of the Beloved Son.

From The Pastor's Desk

As I approach the residence along the breezeway to enter the kitchen, I have a framed photograph. A photo taken of a small priest gathering inclusive of our former Bishop James Paterson Lyke. A friend of his from the Detroit Diocese was visiting. He had completed studies at the Catholic University and was a Canon lawyer. He regaled us with amusing anecdotes about some of his experiences with the leadership there in Michigan. One of them was about a convocation of priests that was held where the local Bishop had given the news that he intended to visit each parish in the diocese over the coming year. One of the priests (during a question and answer period) asked if they were to be scheduled beforehand. The question indicating when and what time. The Bishop's response was simple. "No need to schedule. I will simply knock on the rectory door at the time of the visitation. The presumption then, that the pastor should be ready at any time. I think of Father Don and his humor and graceful presence and also connect his story with the return of Jesus. On the one hand a scheduled visitation might (for some) require preparation and house cleaning. In a word, a residence prepared for the formal visitation.

That might ask for arrangement or rearrangement. I have read a number of scriptural passages that makes use of the word KNOCK. One being, Revelation 3:20 where we read "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the door, (then) I will dine with him, and he with me'. One commentary that I use, quotes one, Bruce Metzger, who shares that the image is captured in Holman Hunt's painting The Light of the World as the Lord knocks and with no handle outside the door it need be opened from within. I believe many of us are familiar with the art rendering. The consequent thought might be am I ready and prepared to open the door and might there be some need of rearrangement and reordering of a house (or dwelling perhaps) that receives Jesus as guest. The verse earlier in Revelation 'those whom I love, I reprove and chastise' with the words being taken from Proverbs "For whom the Lord loves he reproves, and he chastises the those he favors." As we approach the end of the liturgical year we have the seasonable time to approach the Birth of Jesus. Inasmuch as He is born in us in Baptism we house the presence of the Lord as we are tabernacled and tented with the presence of God. Perhaps a time to remind ourselves that He has promised to return as we read in Luke 12:36 as read 'BE LIKE SERVANTS SHO AWAIT THEIR MASTER'S RETURN...READY TO OPEN IMMEDIATE WHEN HE COMES. May we be alert to one which we house that would inhibit our receiving Him when He knocks.

From Bobbi Bugaj

This past Monday night at the parish school of religion, I presented each 8th grader "talents" (they were really poker game chips) and the students were to identify what their talents are and share those talents with another person. The talents being used to help others. Tuesday's evening prayer talked about God's wisdom being pure and how it is without "inconstancy or insincerity." At evening prayer, I added one 'I" to the list. Inconvenient. I did this because my gifts should be shared all the time and sometimes "favors" from people come at a very inconvenient time and while I do them, I can do them grudgingly. So, while my talent should be used consistently and sincerely, my grudging attitude requires that I examine it. My thoughts go to the fact that I while I have talents to share how willingly am I to do so when it is not convenient. Is my attitude hiding them even if I still give it. My talent is given to me freely so I ponder how freely I give it, if I do not want to. I can list a talent given to me by God, and now I meditate on, the consistency and sincerity with a halfhearted smile because my attitude makes my sharing half hearted or should I say, it hides it slightly. I have a picture of a candle in the church, the church is a little dark but the candle still shines. It lights up what is around it and can guide to safety if needed. It asks only that I look to at it and acknowledge that it is there. It is kind of like my attitude and the acknowledgment that while I try to be a good and faithful servant, Two things are needed. One requires that I share the talent and the other requires I look at my heart. Sharing my talent is one thing but the willingness to share fully with the community with out my thoughts on inconvenience is what adds compassion and respectfulness to the giving. Fully sharing is also merciful. All talents require use and giving freely not grudgingly. It is in the seeking and the true acknowledgement that I am human, trying to fully participate in my faith and finding ways to make my walk on this path, wholeheartedly that a change of heart happens. I also acknowledge that maybe I need to change my attitude in a way that walks this path without resentment. I am aware that I am always adjusting thoughts and attitudes to keep on this path and that is it my greatest desire to do so. It is in my full participation and knowledge that my attitude might not be as peaceable, gentle and full of mercy as I would like but I will continue to walk this path and work on that change of heart. I want that heartful change and there is the desire to do so. The desire comes with an understanding that to fully participate means fully acknowledging my need to change. This thought brings hope, and to know that I am always loved brings peace. The growth in faith is the acknowledgement of the attitude that comes with the work and the hope comes that I might hear God say to me one day:

Well done my Good and faithful servant.
