Guest Article :

Rev. Jerome Machar OCSO

(Wisdom 3: 1-9, 2 Corinthians 5:1, 6-10, John 11:17-27)

In the fourth chapter of his Rule, St. Benedict wrote: “Day by day remind yourself that you are going to die” (RB4.47). While he is not advocating an obsession with death, he is indicating the best way to embrace life. We can only turn our gaze to the one thing that matters by owning our mortality. The COVID pandemic has brought the reality of human frailty and mortality to our attention. While confronting our human frailty, it is important to keep in mind that we are mortal creatures who have been created for immortality. This awareness is addressed by the Psalmist. “Teach us to number our days, that we may gain wisdom of heart” (Ps. 90:12). I wonder how different would our lives be if we kept death daily before our eyes? By keeping the reality of death before our eyes, we free ourselves to live richer lives.

Today’s somber celebration helps counterbalance our tendency to simply read Scripture texts that make us feel good. By remembering the souls of those who have gone before us and visiting their graves, we are forced to admit that we are dust, and like those whose graves we visit, we shall return to dust. The author of the Letter to the Hebrews wrote: “We have no lasting city here, but we are seeking one that is to come” (Heb. 13: 14). The more we remember the past, the more accurately will we be able to set our gaze on the future. “For our citizenship is in heaven from where we eagerly await the return of our savior, the Lord Jesus Christ” (Phil. 3:20). While we grieve the loss of loved ones, faith tells us that Christ has conquered death. Granted, each of us will die someday, but none of us is not subject to death’s power because in Christ God has conquered death.

There is a reassuring line in the Rite of Christian Burial. ‘In the sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ, we commend our loved one to almighty God’. Faith tells us that what we commend to the earth is a clay vessel that contains the seed of immortality. The faithful departed see God face to face and are absorbed into God’s love. Having been consumed by the fire of divine love they are purified from the contagion of sin. Having abandoned themselves to God’s infinite mercy, they are drawn into communion with the Trinity.

Today, the church invites us to pray for the souls of the faithful departed and to prepare for our own death. It is important that we maintain a relationship of love and faith with the deceased and that we view death and the afterlife in the light of the Scriptures. By remembering those who have gone before us, we are connected with the history of human existence. At the end of life, death can deprive us of what is mortal, but it can never deprive us of what is divine. Having been stripped of mortality we will be clothed in a robe of immortality. Today allows us to be grateful for the life we have been given, for the people who have shared our lives and who have loved and supported us throughout our lives. Saint Ambrose wrote: “We loved them in life, let us not forget them in death.” Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them. May the souls of all the faithful departed, through the mercy of God, rest in peace. Amen

From The Pastor's Desk

The Season of Advent is drawing near and having celebrated Ordinary time these past weeks it may call the question as to how we witnessed to the sacred presence within us since celebrating Pentecost. In reading Paul's letter to the Philippians what came to mind was his summation of his life in relationship to Jesus. He spoke of the circumcision of our hearts as he recollected his experience on the road to Damascus. In Romans 2:29 he suggests that it is having a pure heart dedicated to God. A summary of our journey in faith may ask for an accounting of sorts in the manner of the expectation of growing into likeness to Jesus Himself. We make the sign of the cross as we begin prayer "In the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit." Appreciating the sharing of one essence and substance and nature indicating a relationship with the Father and Son and Holy Spirit. The rhythm of life and our moving through time has, as well, the expectation of the return of Jesus. Think of Matthew 25:13 and keeping watch for the Day of the Lord's return. How might we summarize and appreciate and accounting of our life. Truth be told we will be judged according to how well we have been accountable as to how well our lives translate and carry over the relationship we have in Jesus. A couple of weeks ago we heard of the challenge about rendering to Caesar and the Roman tax. The action of giving back to Caesar what belongs to Caesar and the accountability to live in the image and likeness in our relationship to our baptismal identity. The identity that we carry within our hearts continues daily until He returns as He promised. In the interval, may we pause to consider, as well, how we apply our relationship with the Trinity. Appreciating, too, that our practice may be part of a weekly routine rather than the challenge of living out our Trinitarian identity. May we seek continual awareness of our union in the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit.

From Bobbi Bugaj

The past Monday, I engaged the 8th grade PSR students with the following question. How can I be prepared for Jesus this week? We talked about wisdom, readiness, hope for eternal life and personal responsibility and what it looked like for them. They struggled with the question: how can I be ready for Jesus this week? I struggled with it too. Most of the time, I get up and say to God these words to start my prayer: "God come to my assistance, Lord make haste to help me." Those words mean something to me each day, because in the course of a day I can be tired, frustrated, and anxious, or I can be happy, content and trusting that God will take care of me. The readiness I feel for a day depends on how much that I want to trust God in a day or how much I want to control my day. Trusting God always produces a better day, may be not an easier day, but a blessed day. I thought of practicing my faith. I looked up the word "practicing" in the New Oxford American dictionary on line and it defined the word practicing as "the actual application of an idea, belief or method as opposed to theories related to it." The application, the living out of something that I say means everything to me. It speaks to my readiness, my being fully prepared to live out, in trust and faith a path that I am fully willing to do. But, do I. I sometimes meditate on the days that I get up and say, "God this is my day not yours." This meditation asks the question, where is my heart today and why. The beginning of the day, with my full participation, is a peaceful and beautiful time, but on those days that I am only half there, not so much. Now, I will admit, it is a struggle sometimes to get up when still tired and try to be fully present in silence. I can sleep bad, I can be very achy and even replaced hips can ache but overtime, I have learned what I call "silence in the aches" that is, I admit it and ask God's help to focus. It works most of the time and those times are the one's that make a hectic day good by the end of it. Those days are also the days where I can feel God present in everything I do, and it makes me more aware of those around me. More aware of the image of God in people and creation of the beautiful world he created as long as I let the Spirit lead. The actual application of my faith makes me ready to face of world where the world does not rest on my shoulders and never has. So back to the question, how can I be ready for Jesus this week, by opening my heart to let the Spirit lead, to open my eyes to see the beauty of his creation in a world that I could just let go by. My readiness starts with a morning saying: This day is your God, help me let you lead. Give me the wisdom to know and see you in this day and help me to step back when needed." I know that God loves me and will always 'make haste to help me."
