Guest Article :

Rev. Jerome Machar OCSO

(Galatians 1: 13-24, Luke 10: 38-42)

I always take great delight in reading Paul's recollections of his conversion. That event stands as a beacon of hope for all of us. The story is intriguing. Saul who was going to save Judaism from the contamination of Christ was stopped in his tracks by Christ. He who prided himself in being an observant Jew was called to the obedience of faith. He, who walked according to his own lights, was blinded by the Light of the World. He who sought to make himself holy was called to holiness by the grace of God. The Light of Truth knocked him down and the Fire of Divine Love purified his heart. His conversion was brought about by the love of Christ working in him. Saul did not stay on the ground. Acknowledging his interior blindness, he stretched out a hand and asked those around him to help him get back on his feet as he prepared to take the next step in faith. A few words from the First Letter of Peter would be appropriate at this point. "Even though you have not seen him, you love him. Even though you do not see him now, you trust in him. Your hearts are filled with an indescribable joy that has been touched with glory" (1 Pet. 1:8).

Our conversion, indeed, the whole walk of faith, begins and ends in Christ and his grace at work in us. The love God has for us is mindboggling. To think, that God so loved the world that he came to us even before we knew our need for his love. The Light of Christ dawns on our darkness. The Son of God extends a nailed scarred hand to raise us out of the mire. The Good Shephard calls us by name and draws us to his sacred heart in a loving embrace. The Savior of mankind floods us with infinite, patient, and indulgent love as he puts us back on our feet. Mercy will always be greater than any sin, no one can put a limit on the love of the all-forgiving God. Just by looking at him, just by raising our eyes from ourselves and our wounds, we create an opening for the action of his grace. By his abundant grace, our heavenly Father transforms us and remolds us until he sees in us what he sees and loved in his Beloved Son.

Meister Eckhart shared a wonderful reflection. "Now listen to a marvel! How marvelous, to be without and within, to embrace and be embraced, to see and be the seen, to hold and to be held – that is the goal, where the spirit is ever at rest, united in joyous eternity" (Pr. 86, Meister Eckhart). God has perfect knowledge of us. All our thoughts and actions are exposed to his loving gaze. When we allow Christ to gaze upon us, we are transformed. Because we have been conformed to the Beloved Son in Baptism, we have become a new creation. We need God's favor to be happy. We need Christ's loving embrace to be saved. If we seek God in all creatures with ardent longing we will be aware of God's presence and be attentive to his voice every day of our lives. In those sacred moments, we will be as near to God as we are to ourselves

"Most High glorious God, bring light to the darkness of my heart. Give me right faith, certain hope, and perfect charity, insight, and wisdom, so I can always observe Thy holy and true command. Amen."

(The Prayer of Saint Francis before the Cross at San Damiano)

From The Pastor's Desk

Whenever I hear the word (or read) “steward” I am often times reminded of my seminary days. It was in my last year in the college and I was afforded the room off the hallway exit (a shared space) and had easy access to the refectory, from the Latin “recifere” (to restore) dining area. I was responsible for the setup of breakfast and along with Sr. Deotilla, preparing the tables. Kitchen duty preparation as well clean up. Some might say that it was the role of stewardship. I did have the background and experience of working at a local restaurant. Interesting how the word “restaurant” has a connection from the French 'food that restores'. I began as a busboy clearing tables and resetting along with making sure glasses were filled for the guests. Sometime later, I was engaged in being the dishwasher and a means of cleansing and restoring. I suppose I was given something directly involved with meal preparation at the salad station. While at St Mary's, I was available on weekends and one summer assisted with the preparation of meals under the guidance of one of the owners. The head cook was on holiday. I still have the memory of our own Fr. John Garrity, of blessed memory, and Bishop Michael Murphy descending the stairs to say hello and to say they had enjoyed the meal. When the head chef returned from visiting his family in Sicily. I was then given the opportunity to serve as maitre d' in welcoming and seating folks who came into the restaurant. Over the years a variety of experiences and learning different roles. There was also the Saturday check list of maintaining the space and caring for the washing of windows and sweeping the parking lot. One of our seminary professors would a community and members of the Body of Christ. May we be faithful in being stewards of the One we cooften say that ministry is about roles and goals and relationships. We may appreciate that we all have a part in sharing the role of being stewards with the goal of offering hospitality (receiving others as guests which the Benedictine Rule observes, as in Matthew 25:35 “I was a stranger and you welcomed me”) and so further deepen our relationship with Jesus as well as with one another as nsume. As we celebrate communion may we also be mindful of the food that restores us as well to feed others by our company.

From Bobbi Bugaj

"I believe" are two very important words to me as they they remind me, there are somethings that I do not believe, and those things should give me pause. I believe in God and his protection and I also do not believe Satan will do anything good for me in life. Both are true at the same time. I have chosen to follow in Jesus's footsteps and perhaps I do stumble but I come back because all that is good and beautiful is on this path of faith. I have also been stunned one time, when I said to someone "I will pray for you" and their reply was "I never had someone to pray for me before." That reply has always stayed with me, because of how open ended it was and also the thought, I am a child of God, and should be working to be the image of God in the world, and does it show and do I practice It. No, Bobbi Bashing, it is just the thought that how do I project that image and likeness and what does my follow through show. Before that encounter, I never really thought about how empty my life would be without my faith. I love this journey with Christ, the rising of the sun, the moon in the sky, the trees in my back yard, the changing of the seasons. How when I ask "how are you" they reply they are blessed. That is my favorite answer to that question, because I feel like they are saying, good or bad day, God blesses me and that is enough. I am so grateful for the years that I took care of Mom; that we had that time and my funny realizations that my Mom, even when her memory was not what it used to be, could remember that she was mad at me, when she did not remember my name or even what I did. But that grateful memory comes with the realization that whatever I did, I was probably, somehow disrespectful and it hurt her deep down. Now, being honest on both sides, she did not want to eat, and I made her eat anyway. She was not thrilled with that, I was. My thought here is more about how God's love and strength can look different seen through the eyes of a brokenheart person, who is not sure what faith is or looks like. Growing up I learned early, if you say you are going to pray for someone, you wrote it down and put it on a prayer list. Being a child of God and hopefully the image of God in life, I have responsibilities. I have to show up and participate in this journey. It is just not one step in front of the other without encountering God in the world. I know that everything pure and simple in my life is God's way of saying to me, "Let's take this path, it will be hard, and I am right beside you." I have learned to trust this and having time at the end of the day while tired and frustrated, I put myself in His presence and there is healing and peace. There is comfort and strength, there is love. God loves me. I am his and I understand the words a little more each day "Be still and know I AM"
